The simplest definition that I know of is the traditional measurement of how efficiently the output is produced: Productivity = Total output divided by Total Input Assuming the efficiency increases, does this mean that you have a more productive labor force? If you use only the labor barometer this may indeed be so but, in truth, the improvement may not be passed on to the organization if such increase is eaten up by increases in wages/benefits and/or higher cost of materials. In addition to comprehending the labor productivity itself, you should consider the costs involved in generating such increase(s) in labor productivity. Costs therefore are a measure of the resources used to produce a unit of output. You should thus be looking at a relationship whereby productivity measurement is visualized, not purely as an improvement in the output and cost but as the value of the increased product that is passed on to the Organization. Effective Management plays an important part in motivating workers to achieve higher productivity. Various indicators, including feedback from successful Companies around the world...
